EL PASO TONG WAR STILL WARS

Fewel-Kinsella Affair Is Not Yet Near a Settlement, It Appears.

El Paso has a real tong war in progress. It is the Fewel and Kinsella tongs who are at verbal warfare, and as yet there is nothing but word carnage in progress.

Major Fewel says he never heard of anyone buying property from a man that did not belong to and presenting it to its rightful owner. For that reason he cannot see how Dick Caples is going to make good on his signed statement to purchase the foot of ground and deed it to the major. Besides, major says, he is not an object of charity and needs no one to settle his troubles for him. Major said much more, but that was the denouement of his argument.

Tom Kerr, one of the pioneering pioneers of this pioneer town, has added "Fewel" to the flame of the argument by declaring that he built the adobe wall in question. That was 25 years ago and if his memory serves him right, as he thinks it does, the men who were running a saloon in the corner room paid him for the work. That is a score for the Fewel side of the argument. It was then discovered that the wall was not in line with the real property line but seemed to have a leaning toward the direction of the union station.

In the mean time the brick masons are building a wall along the line which is supposed to divide the two pieces of real estate. Major Fewel says too much has already been said about the wall and he has nothing to say—either for publication or otherwise. The "spite wall" promises to become as famous as the cow that kicked over the lamp which set Chicago on fire, or the hat "Glavdam" Jones has worn since 1872.

GLOVE FACTORY LOCATED HERE

El Pasoans Put in Machinery to Make Them for Southwest Territory.

Big plants from little factories grow to paraphrase the old saw about the small acorns and the big oaks. Charlie Stevens, of El Paso, Joe Leahy and E. C. Belt, of Lordsburg, are going to give the adage a practical test. Having organized the Southwestern Glove company these three men are installing, cutting and sewing machinery in an adobe house on the corner of the canal and Seventh streets.
